

Avoid Idaho LAUNCH Grant Repayment

Idaho LAUNCH Grants are awarded to participants based on their plan to attend a post-secondary education or training program aligned with an in-demand career at a state-approved provider or higher education institution.

Before accepting a final award, participating students should review and confirm the institution and program listed on their application. These details will be verified each time an invoice is paid on behalf of the participant.

Changing institutions, providers, or programs may cause participants to lose or have to repay their Idaho LAUNCH Grant. They may also have to repay the grant money if they don't meet certain academic expectations once they arrive. These instances are explained below:

Unsatisfactory Academic Progress: A school or provider reports the participant is not meeting academic requirements or is making unsatisfactory progress.

Expulsion: Defined by individual schools or industry standards. Generally, refers to a case where a participant is asked to leave the institution or program.

Voluntary Drop or No-Show: If a participant fails to start or decides to leave a program before completing their program.

Job Out: Participants who leave training to pursue a job opportunity that is not related to their chosen program or in-demand career. Please note, if participants provide evidence that they left for a job related to their program, they won't be required to pay back funds.

Exceptions may exist based on special circumstances, exclusions, and an appeal process. Repayment terms and conditions vary, depending on the situation.
